About the Webinar

The coexistence of dual form of malnutrition is a common issue among school children in the Southeast Asia (SEA) region. While undernutrition remains a major nutritional problem among them, the prevalence of overweight and obesity have been increasing and become more important threats to their health and wellbeing. Measures to address these nutritional problems should be systematically carried out, to ensure children are able to grow up optimally and achieve academic excellence.

Schools are important places for nutrition intervention programmes to be conducted as they reach the majority of children, and through them, reaching their parents and caregivers. Adequate knowledge on healthy eating and active living gain at an impressionable learning age can have longer lasting effect and help to prevent non-communicable diseases in their later life.

Efforts have been taken by countries in SEA countries to implement various nutrition promotion and education programmes among school children. In this webinar, invited speakers from the member's countries in SEA-PHN Network will share respective experiences in promoting optimal nutritional wellbeing of school children. This webinar also provides a good opportunity for stakeholders involved in school nutrition promotion programmes to learn more on the constraints and success factors in implementing such programmes.
